

» RBI Governor Shaktikanta Das said if the current geopolitical situation continues, it could be a “high for long” scenario for interest rates globally

» In the midst of the current difficult scenario globally, the positives have been global supply chains easing out and new alignments emerging between countries

» On the slowdown globally, Das said it was grimmer six months ago since a recession in the European Union and the US were expected

» On what lies ahead, Das said that wholesale credit will pick up on the back of the government leading the way in capital expenditure

» Equity markets are functioning reasonably well. There is no real concern for large-caps. Large companies will not only invest in their existing businesses, but deploy capex in new initiatives too

» The credit growth we’re seeing now is from smaller companies in the ₹2,000-3,000-crore turnover range. These are growing at a much faster clip than large ones, and they are exploring international markets too

» A massive amount of credit growth is coming from semi-urban and urban areas. Even basic consumption has enough momentum to drive a bank’s retail business, which will drive its wholesale business further

» We may not get the kind of credit cycles we saw in the past. The ₹50,000-crore power plants, large cement and infra capacity—it isn’t coming back in the next 12 months

» Once India’s per capita GDP crosses $3,000-3,500, as China’s did 25-30 years ago, it will be a J-curve for everyone involved. That is one reason driving foreign banks’ bullishness about India

Sandeep Bakhshi (left), MD & CEO of ICICI Bank, with Aroon Purie, Chairman and Editor-in-Chief of India Today Group

Kaizad Bharucha (right), Deputy MD of HDFC Bank, receives the award for Best Large Indian Bank from Nitin Gadkari

Sandeep Bakhshi, MD & CEO of ICICI Bank, with the award for Bank of the Year

Debashish Chakraborty (right), Co-founder of Perfios, with the award for Best Fintech in Value Added Services