» It's no longer banks versus NBFCs, but banks and NBFCs together. Both can coexist to deliver the best value to customers. A customer no longer cares if it's a bank or a non-bank entity as long as their needs are fulfilled

» The US has 4,000-plus financial services players. In India, you can't think of names after the top 100. The market can be grown much faster via partnerships, and you don't have to wait for regulations to be loosened

» Within the NBFC industry, everyone is a specialised player. Someone is strong in geography, someone in the products they provide, and so on. They have been solution providers to customers in their own niches

» NBFCs weren't built on regulatory arbitrage; they were built around customer-centric models. And, they will continue to expand the market. The industry looks forward to Reliance's entry. In most cases, markets grow when a new player comes in
