

» The Indian economy is very stable despite the bleak outlook across other major economies. The country will take another two to three years to achieve 7-8 per cent of growth

» Leverage levels of India Inc. are extremely low in the CRISIL portfolio. It allows corporates to withstand other shocks and leverage and invest when the opportunity arises

» The banking sector is in a much better position to lubricate the economy at present than it was earlier

» The old pension schemes are fiscal time bombs ticking throughout the world. They are already benefitting a bunch of people that are already at the top

» Asset monetisation and divestment needs to be the fulcrum of the upcoming Budget. Plus, the government needs to focus on capex

» A rating system to measure products, services and security of fintech firms can help the whole financial industry

» Banks traditionally have the great advantage of trust. Fintechs, meanwhile, are able to reach the last mile and bring more customers into the banking and credit ecosystem

» Fintechs and banks must work together for the benefit of consumers and the country as competition between them is no longer relevant

» The relationship between fintechs and banks has progressed beyond just partnerships to revenue-sharing and long-term co-opting and co-owning of customers

» Fintechs and banks should leverage AI and ML capabilities to create the next disruptive product in the financial sector

» Fintechs have consumerised the banking world. Data collected and shared in the process is a risk that both fintechs and banks need to manage to build trust
