has seen significant growth in consumption in the past three years, monetisation has lagged due to the fact that neither game subscriptions nor IAPs—both established revenue models in mature markets—have caught up in India because it never saw a strong console gaming culture.

However, the pandemic years have brought about a welcome change, with India seeing growth in gaming average revenues per user (ARPUs). From approximately ₹150 in 2017, casual gaming ARPUs are poised to touch ₹268 by 2024-25, according to KPMG.

“One of the biggest positives for the sector in the pandemic has been the growth of ARPUs. Currently, Indians are consuming games at an unparalleled pace. ARPU growth in India is at the highest level,” says Vishal Gondal, CEO of mobile games company nCORE Games. “However, even with this growth, it is clear that Indian developers and publishers will have to innovate on monetisation.”
