collaboration. We will see very aggressive growth over the next couple of years," says Yashovardhan Saboo, Founder and Chairman of Ethos.

Bvlgari had entered India in 2004 when the luxury market was nascent. But it shut shop in 2011, after French luxury conglomerate LVMH Moët Hennessy Louis Vuitton acquired a controlling stake in it. Three years later, Bvlgari was back, by way of a subsidiary. However, the luxury jewellery market was still emerging. Branded jewellery was niche since most Indians preferred purchasing jewellery from family jewellers. But things have changed since then.

Take, for instance, branded jewellery from Titan's Zoya that closed FY22 at ₹140 crore in revenue—way over its target of ₹100 crore. While the wedding market remains the biggest draw, jewellery is becoming more contemporary in design.

Bvlgari has benefitted from that. "We are growing very strongly. The boutique will surpass all past records this year in New Delhi," says Babin. Bvlgari's retail partners—Ethos, Johnson Watch Co. and Kapoor Watch Co.—have also done well, as per Babin. Ethos, India's largest chain of luxury watch boutiques with 50 stores, reported revenue of ₹173.6 crore with 95 per cent YoY growth in Q1 of FY23. "It has been a record year for us in India and we haven't yet explored the full potential of the country," says Babin.

LAST AUGUST, Bvlgari appointed Priyanka Chopra Jonas as its global brand ambassador. "India is top of our mind and that is why we are working with Priyanka," says Babin. He admits that it's not just her popularity in India but also the Middle-East and the US, important markets for Bvlgari, which makes her an ideal brand ambassa-
