

There are plenty of good restaurants in the world. But what if you're looking for a truly exceptional fine-dining experience where the food, service, atmosphere and location are all exceptional? We went through the Michelin guide and the World's 50 Best Restaurants' list and shortlisted these must-visit restaurants for you. Their status also means that a table needs to be reserved almost three months in advance, and a no-show generally results in a heavy fine. Two of them are in Copenhagen, so maybe a Danish holiday is also called for.

SUBLIMOTION IBIZA, SPAIN

PRICE $2,000 PER PERSON

► For years, Sublimotion has been named as the most expensive restaurant in the world, at nearly $2,000 per person. So, what do you get at that price? A futuristic, exclusive experience for just 12 diners with a 20-course tasting menu spread over three hours, the restaurant offers amazing gourmet cuisine with innovative technology and mesmerising stage performances. "We aim to turn the table into a stage and the diner into a star," says two-star Michelin Chef and Founder Paco Roncero. A team of 10 Michelin star chefs works with a team of designers, engineers, stage directors, composers and illusionists to bring to you a memorable gourmet experience. While enjoying your meal, your other senses will be engaged by throbbing laser light shows, virtual reality expeditions and projection mapping.

ULTRAVIOLET BY PAUL PAIRET SHANGHAI, CHINA

PRICE $1,270 PER PERSON

► Rarely will you find a fine-dining experience that can also give you an adrenaline rush. But this 20-course meal combined with lights, sounds and smells at a secret location does just that. The three-star Michelin restaurant is created by French Chef Paul Pairet, who takes 10 customers on an interactive culinary adventure that is beyond their wildest expectations. The journey starts at Pairet's second establishment, Mr & Mrs Bund, where diners mingle over cocktails before being driven across Shanghai to an unassuming secret spot in a nondescript van. There, in a sizeable room with a single table for 10 people, your name is lighted on the seat in front of you. A room that first appears empty, changes with time as sight, sound, and scent combine to provide a surreal dining experience while the dishes are served by a masterfully orchestrated service team.
