110 | WHAT HAS BEEN the best thing since sliced bread? For most of us who move around a lot, it is Google Maps. But there are times when the app directs you to nowhere as up-to-date data isn't available. If you're looking for alternatives, fret not. Here are some free navigation apps that you might want to try.

Community Power | Waze

A popular community-based app for navigation, Waze was launched in 2008. And its popularity led to its acquisition by Google for around $1 billion in 2013. Designed for car and motorbike users, Waze has a clean interface and suggests the best routes based on user-collected data. It also changes routes instantly to avoid traffic. Users can also update information such as traffic, crash, hazard, and more on the map with just a tap. And if you love listening to music, you are going to love Waze as the music controls from apps such as Amazon Prime Music and Spotify appear on the top. This makes it really simple to manage music while driving.
