among IIMs to be situated inside the main town. There are other attractions, too. It is a locale of great religious import across the world—from the Phalgu river to the Mahabodhi Temple Complex, the core pilgrimage centre for millions of Buddhists around the world. Perhaps because of that renown and the heavy tourist presence, the town is considered among the safest in the state and is well connected by air (Gaya International Airport), road and rail—making it easier for students and faculty to make it their home.

Now, about imbibing the ethos of its surroundings, the institute has incorporated many Buddhist concepts into its structure and functioning. The new academic building, for in-
