two-year PGDM on Coursera costs a quarter of what the on-campus programme does, says Raghav Gupta, MD, India and APAC, Coursera. The course combines synchronous and asynchronous courses (online courses; the former runs in real time, the latter can be followed using recorded videos) with on-campus experiences. "There is certainly demand for hybrid learning like this where you can learn when you want without losing the on-campus experience," he says, adding that IIMA saw more than 100,000 online enrolments in its open courses on the platform within six weeks. In contrast, the limited seats available means that only a tiny fraction of the 200,000 CAT takers make it to India's top schools.

As India and its corporate landscape are set to occupy the pride of place in the world economy over the next few decades, the face of management education is also changing with a multitude of options for students. As IIMB's Krishnan puts it: "There's this whole spectrum [of programmes]. And there are all these options. We will need to configure them in various ways to meet the needs of the target group." That can only be good news for aspiring managers and CEOs.
