this could work. In 2018, a trio of senior Sequoia India executives—V.T. Bharadwaj, Gautam Mago, and Abhay Pandey—left the firm to float the new fund A91 Partners, which went on to raise over $900 million across two funds.

ENVIABLE LEGACY

Of course, it helps that Peak XV has a legacy that it can fall back on. Since its inception in 2006 through a merger with WestBridge Capital, Sequoia India has invested a total of $6.7 billion in the country, of which $4.5 billion has been realised through exits and initial public offers (IPO) and another $1.6 billion in public stock is readily available for liquidity. In that time, the VC delivered over 50 unicorns and 19 IPOs.

Besides, Peak XV already has an extensive portfolio of over 400 firms spread across the region. It also has $2.5 billion of uninvested capital.

“Financially, their [Sequoia Capital’s] investments in India have performed very well. In the venture industry, if you compared between 2013 and 2023, the Indian ecosystem is orders of magnitude larger. In 2013 we had three–four unicorns, today we have 110. Everyone has made returns here including the US, Japanese, European and Middle Eastern funds. This is now the time when the whole world’s capital is going to come to India in much [larger] volumes... Therefore, Peak XV, as a standalone fund, has immense possibilities,” says Pranav Pai, Founding Partner and Chief Investment Officer at 3one4 Capital.

THE CHALLENGES

Sizeable bequest or not, Peak XV faces multiple headwinds. One impact of the rebranding, some in the industry say, could be the changed perceptions of LPs without the Sequoia tag.

Singh isn’t worried. He says the India team has been successful in establishing direct relationships with global LPs and that its last fundraise—$2.85 billion in June 2022—was done independently.

“We have met over 70 institutional LPs across the US and Europe since the announcement and are very grateful for their continued support. The big takeaway is that a lot of LPs are quite keen on maintaining or increasing their India investments and I think that is good news for us and all
