

Cartier Masse Mys- térieuse

Cartier is well known for its love of mystery and illusion. Over 100 years ago in 1912, the company launched its 'mystery' clocks where the clock face seemed to float in mid-air, leaving you baffled as to how the mechanics actually work. This element of mystery is perfectly captured in its latest watch that has been eight years in the making. With only 30 individually-numbered pieces, the mystery watch is a collector's delight.

Jaeger-LeCoultre Ren- dez-Vous Dazzling Star

A watch is the epitome of order, but what happens when precise watch mechanics are engineered to behave randomly? Jaeger-LeCoultre's Rendez-Vous Dazzling Star reflects the unpredictable nature of shooting stars. Depending upon the wearer's wrist movement, a star arcs across the aventurine dial at arbitrary moments of the day. The Dazzling Star is a modestly sized wristwatch, at 36mm x 9.80mm and will soon be available at the brand's boutiques globally. It has a deep blue aventurine dial and is set with diamonds on the bezel and the top of the lugs. The sudden appearance of the shooting star adds magic to the watch.
