

HERMÈS BIRKIN

The Hermès Birkin is considered the Holy Grail of handbags. At a Christie's auction in Hong Kong on November 25, an Hermès Himalaya Niloticus Crocodile Diamond Birkin with 18k white gold and diamond hardware is going under the hammer. The bag is crafted from Nile crocodile hide. The designation 'Himalaya' does not apply to the origin of the bag, but rather to the delicate gradation of the colour. The smoky grey fades into a pearly white, resembling the snow-capped Himalayas. The process of dyeing a crocodile hide is time-consuming and exponentially more difficult as the shades lighten.

Estimated price: HK$1.6–2.6 million

PATEK PHILIPPE

For watch collectors, besides the condition of the watch, it is the provenance which is most important. So when a Patek Philippe, undoubtedly the most coveted watch at auctions, has the distinction of once being the personal property of Andy Warhol—one of the most famous artists of the 20th century—it is extra special. The beautifully preserved yellow gold reference 3448 vintage wristwatch with an 18k gold case will go under the hammer in New York on December 5, as part of Christie's Important Watches auction.

Estimated price: $350,000-600,000

THE PINK SUPREME DIAMOND

Diamonds they say are a girl's best friend, and if they are coloured and rare they are even more coveted. The Pink Supreme is a phenomenal 15.48 carat fancy intense pink internally flawless diamond ring coming up for auction at Hong Kong on November 27 as part of Christie's Magnificent Jewels collection that will also feature a 40.05 carat Golconda diamond. The Pink Supreme's distinct pink colour is achieved by less than 2 per cent of all diamonds. The stone's size, expert cut and internally flawless character make it exceptional.

Estimated price: $9–12 million
