

The Best Advice I Ever Got

N. VENU | MD & CEO, INDIA AND SOUTH ASIA | HITACHI ENERGY

Hitachi Energy is a global leader in power technologies

‘Tough times don’t last, tough people do’

What was the problem you were grappling with?

Hitachi Energy became a standalone listed legal entity in India amidst the pandemic. We had to halt operations at many of our factories to protect our people. This was clearly not how we were aiming to start off a newly created enterprise.

Whom did you approach for advice?

I approached Claudio Facchin, the Global Chief Executive Officer of Hitachi Energy.

What was the advice you received?

His advice was that we ensure people remain at the centre of what we do and their welfare must come first. Second, as we supply mission-critical technology to essential services and critical core sector industries, the show must go on. Tough times don’t last, but tough people do.

How effective was it in resolving the problem?

The words of Facchin guided me to prepare for the new normal in the best possible manner. We deployed advanced digital solutions, remote capabilities to ensure our partners remained on track for their projects, and we dynamically engaged with our varied stakeholders to create an inclusive business environment. Thanks to the spirit and strength of our people and our partners, we have stayed resilient and preserved our zest for innovation.

However, we are not completely out of the woods yet. We need to remain cautious. BT
