

3. Noughty is a zero-alcohol Chardonnay with only 14 calories per glass 4. Kati Patang's NOT range of zero-alcohol cocktails mimic the taste of the original cocktails 5. Coolberg is India's first zero-alcohol beer lion in 2019 and is expected to reach $35.6 billion by 2030 at a CAGR of 8.1 per cent. Some of the world's biggest brewers have sensed this and have launched zero per cent alcohol versions of their famous brands. In India, AB InBev has launched Budweiser 0.0, Hoegaarden 0.0 and Hoegaarden Rosee 0.0, while Heineken offers Heineken 0.0. The products are available in all major cities and can also be bought online through Amazon.

With nearly 40-60 per cent less calories than traditional fizzy drinks and the taste of beer to boot, these no-alcohol beers are popular with a younger generation that is more health conscious and would like to avoid a 'beer belly'. Unlike regular beer, which is brewed after full fermentation, non-alcoholic beer is made in controlled conditions allowing only limited fermentation, which prevents the yeast from producing alcohol.

Mumbai-based Coolberg is India's first zero-alcohol beer company. The 'beer' is made by malting barley in water, boiling it to a high temperature, and then cooling the brew. Coolberg offers six variants—Malt, Ginger, Cranberry, Mint, Peach and Strawberry. Its most popular offering is the Malt beer, made with toasty notes of barley malts and hops.

Since these beverages are non-alcoholic, they can be purchased online. They are popular not only in the metros but also in smaller towns, and states such as Gujarat and Bihar, which have prohibition. "Our non-alcohol cocktails are very popular in Gujarat. Ahmedabad and Surat are big markets for us," says Svami's Bhasin.

So, next time you are the designated driver at a party or are avoiding alcohol for whatever reason, give the fizzy drinks a miss and pop open a can of zero-alcohol beer or pour yourself a no-alcohol cocktail. BT

@smitabw