

TRAVEL THE TECH WAY

Travelling abroad? Check out these apps and accessories if you want a hassle-free trip

BY NIDHI SINGAL

► After more than two years of uncertainty, international travel is finally picking up. While you're all prepped with gadgets such as smartphones, laptops and cameras—and we won't bore you with more details—broadly, international travel throws up many challenges such as unfamiliar language, foreign phone networks, missing luggage, varied electrical standards and, of course, the need to keep your gadgets sanitised. Here are a few helpful devices and apps that will ensure your trip remains hassle-free, convenient and fun.

Don't let language
come in the way
when travelling.

Speak in the local tongue with the help of these smartphone apps like Travel Phrasebook. The app has many useful foreign phrases and words, and features languages such as Spanish, German, French, Japanese, Traditional Chinese and more. The app downloads a language pack the first time you select a new language and also reads out the word or phrase. If you want to learn a new language, there's Duolingo. And if you want to scan and translate signboards and other text in real time, Google Translate is your best friend.

CONNECT

To use apps in a foreign land, one needs data connectivity.

While Indian telecom players have international plans, local numbers usually work better or come in handy to book services such as cabs. The first option is to buy a local SIM card with special data plans. If you want to avoid the hassle, apps like Airalo have you covered. Airalo gives you instant access to an eSIM in countries such as the US, South Africa, the UAE, Singapore, and many more. Once you're home, simply disable the eSIM from your smartphone's settings.
